ROAD KING

Jeff Daniels is motor-home-crazed in RV—and in real life

The anti-Travolta

"I started renting RVs and liked them so much, I bought one," Jeff Daniels says. "When I got the part in RV, I drove four days from Michigan to the set in Vancouver. I pulled up as the production staff was setting up RV driving lessons for me, Robin Williams and the other actors. They took one look at me and said, 'Cancel his lessons.' Then I hit the air brakes and let out a loud hiss."

Higher power

"One of my favorite things about driving the RV is seeing the little Honda Civics below when I'm making a wide turn," Daniels says. "You need every inch, so your bumper comes right up to theirs. Looking into the eyes of that driver looking up at this King Kong vehicle, all you see is fear. Then you cut the wheel perfectly and their life is spared. Now that's fun."

Wheel daze

"During a trip, my wife, son and I went to a truck stop," Daniels says. "We got back in the RV, I got on the highway and my son said, 'Where's Mom?' I left her behind. You're basically driving a building with lots of hiding places, so I didn't notice. I drove 18 miles to the next exit and turned around, but she had gotten in a stranger's car. Now we take a head count—even if it's only the two of us."
